Nevada National Security Site...on the Web and in Your Community

Are you interested in learning about what is being done to cleanup historical nuclear test locations? Information like this is now available at the touch of a screen at the Paseo Verde Library in Henderson, Nevada.

The new Nevada National Security Site (NNSS) information kiosk provides library users the opportunity to access, via a simple touch screen, topics such as environmental cleanup, groundwater characterization, and radioactive waste disposal; individuals can also receive information regarding current national security efforts and facts on historic nuclear testing.

“The Nevada Site Office is always looking for innovative ways to communicate and inform the public about NNSS activities,” said Scott Wade, Assistant Manager for Environmental Management. “The kiosk is a mobile, user-friendly way to connect with a wider audience.”

The NNSS information kiosk will remain at the Paseo Verde Library for three months and then move to various locations around southern Nevada. If you are interested in requesting the kiosk for your facility, please email envmgt@nv.doe.gov or contact the Office of Public Affairs at 702-295-3521.
